Before you can take courses worth more than 45 HE credits in one term, you must have consulted a guidance counsellor. A joint decision will be made, taking into account the results of previous studies, the type of course you are adding to your course load, the reason for taking extra courses, the availability of study places, and an estimation of the results if you add extra courses. Based upon these criteria and the guidance counsellor's recommendation, the head(s) of the department where the student is already registered will take a decision. The decision cannot be appealed.
